A Protective Services Alert is not needed

- If an address for the family is already available. In that case, the county should communicate directly with authorities in the county and state in which the family resides.
- When a family has simply moved. In such cases, the county office should communicate with local authorities in the other state to make a request for follow-up services and provide a copy of relevant case records.
- If the child is in the custody of the state or under court jurisdiction. In such cases, a Pick Up Order should be filed. If the court releases jurisdiction or custody, then a Protective Services Alert may be used.

If there is reason to believe that a family has relocated or fled to one or more particular states. In such cases, the alert should be addressed to the states where it is believed that the family is to be located.
