Bentonville teen who's visually impaired completes unique program

From the left, Zane Smith of Bentonville assists co-worker Rachael Benfer and Lisa Marr, office manager, with a computer issue. Smith was working at the Law Offices of Peter Miller as part of the Jump Start career development program for high school students who are blind or visually impaired. The Department of Human Services Division of Services for the Blind places students in part-time jobs to learn skills to help them transition into work or college.

Zane Smith of Bentonville was among the teens graduating from Jump Start, a career development program for high school students who are blind or severely visually impaired. The program ran from June 5 – June 24.

Students are selected from applications taken in the early spring of each year and come from across the state to attend the unique program sponsored by the Department of Human Services Division of Services for the Blind (DSB) and the Arkansas School for the Blind and Visually Impaired (ASBVI).

DSB places students in part-time jobs in the mornings and offers educational and recreational activities in the afternoons and evenings. This is the only program of its kind in Arkansas and is designed to assist students in transitioning from high school to employment or post-secondary education and increase their confidence in social situations.

To the degree possible, students are placed in jobs in their fields of interest so they can gain insight into their chosen professions. Students who don't have specific career goals at this point in their lives are given other employment according to their experience, skills and abilities.

It was Smith's first Jump Start experience and his first job. "I could not be more grateful. It's been a great opportunity. I loved my job." Smith said he was interested in marketing and business, but now is also considering law after being placed at the Law Offices of Peter Miller. "The experience was really great. They put me to work with one of the lawyers. I helped draft questions, researched wrongful deaths, and a variety of things. They believed in me. They gave me feedback."

"His ability to communicate with people was so impressive," said Lisa Marr, office manager. "We enjoyed having him here."

Smith and other students heard job information presentations from Goodwill Industries, Arkansas Lighthouse for the Blind, Easter Seals, and Medlinc, a medical training and staffing company. They toured the West Rock Coffee factory and World Services for the Blind, which offers several career training programs. Representatives from the University of Arkansas at Morrilton presented information about choosing a college, financial resources, and balancing campus life and studies. The students visited Central Baptist College in Conway.

Students toured the Arkansas Career Training Institute (ACTI), formerly known as the Hot Springs Rehabilitation Center. While in Hot Springs, they explored Garvan Woodland Gardens and rode on the Belle of Hot Springs Riverboat.

Smith said other than work, his favorite parts of Jump Start were the guest speakers who presented information on a variety of topics and the talent show, in which he danced. Smith said he was active in most school sports until his vision declined from retinitis pigmentosa (RP). He sought another "athletic release and found dance." Now he is a professional dancer in ballroom and pop and lock dancing.

Jump Start students learned independent living skills that many people without visual impairments take for granted. They learned money management, banking, stress management techniques, self-advocacy and meal planning. They participated in a cooking lesson with Chef Brian Kelly of Little Rock. Students received orientation and mobility training on how to travel using a white cane.

The students volunteered at Our House, an organization that provides shelter, training, and child care for people who are homeless or near homeless, and Arkansas Rice Depot, a statewide hunger and disaster relief organization.

Working part-time and interacting with other students who are blind or visually impaired increased the students' confidence, social skills and self-esteem. Some students who came from small communities had never met other teenagers who are blind or visually impaired. Social skills and interactions with others are a crucial part of life, so recreational activities were built into the program.

Students went bowling, saw a movie, painted their own works of art, and saw a play at Murry's Dinner Playhouse.

After a class on business and dining etiquette, students practiced the skills they learned at Sonny Williams' Steak Room and Benihana Hibachi Grill.

Jump Start participants stayed on the ASBVI campus during the week and returned home on the weekends. At the end of the three-week program, there was a talent show and a graduation event held at the Ron Robinson Theater, part of the Central Arkansas Library System.

DSB provides vocational rehabilitation services to adults who are blind or severely visually impaired and whose goal is successful employment. The division also serves youth and older blind individuals.
